"My name is Dianna and my ex-husband's name is Stephen. We were married for twelve years, but when I got pregnant with my son the physical abuse increased. I had worked a job since I was 17 years old, but my husband began to pull me from my family, friends and work. Living in my Buick with my 9 year-old son and my 3 year-old baby girl was my seventh attempt to get away from him. I just did not have the resources or anywhere to go. Today, I am happy that my children are healthy. But I am equally grateful to be living without having to look over my shoulder anymore. I feel safe. And DVIP helped make that happen."

DVIP staff listened, believed in me and let me make my own decisions. I felt more resilient and started connecting to a number of programs, all willing to help me on my feet again. The Crisis Center helped me with nutritional food from the pantry and some financial assistance. Abbe Mental Health Center provided counseling for me and my children. RVAP offered advocacy services and support groups. Goodwill helped me prepare to go back to work. With the help of DVIP and the other United Way partners, I felt like my children and I had a future where I could keep them safe. Looking back, two years later, I still have that Buick. It is rusted and old, but it still runs. It reminds me how far I have come, and gets me where I need to go. And really — that is how it should be.
